

AISGW is pleased to offer this fall subscription series, "Building Belonging," to support our member schools' diversity, equity and inclusion work. The goal of this series is to provide deeper learning opportunities for educators who are working to create more inclusive school communities. We hope that these offerings can meet much of a school's professional development needs in the area of DEI.

What does the subscription include and how much does it cost?

The series includes seven workshops covering a range of DEI topics (see below). By registering for the series, a school can send an unlimited number of participants -- from administrators to trustees to classroom teachers -- to each of the listed sessions for one flat fee. If permission is granted by the speaker, schools will be able to access the recordings and resources to share with their entire school community. The subscription fee is $675 per school.

How do I register for the series?

At registration, participant schools will appoint a contact person who will register individual participants for each session. The contact person will receive the Zoom link and distribute the link as well as any related program materials to the participants for each session. Registration for the series will open in August.

What are the session topics and when will the sessions be offered?

Sessions will be offered twice monthly at 4:00pm for either 60 or 90 minutes from late September to December. All sessions will take place virtually. The sessions are intended for heads of school, trustees, division leaders, DEI practitioners, counselors, and in some cases, teacher-leaders. Schools may determine who they would like to attend each session and there will be no limit on the number of attendees per school.
